

Liberation Currents

“ We have entered a time of great transformation. Global pandemics, emerging technologies, and planetary change have acted as a catalyst for a collective turning point. One that is exposing redundant belief systems, social structures, and ideologies inhibiting the creation of a better future. At the heart of this shift is purpose over power, and people over politics, but it will take every person to stand up, seek the truth and use their voice. This is a liberation current, and this is what will positively change the world.

In this presentation, Emma shares her personal story of rising from the ashes of being unfairly shamed, to step into her significance as a purpose-driven woman of influence. This topic places a magnifying glass over the invisible layer of toxic social power that by its very nature influences every aspect of who we are, even controlling what we will stand up for and for who. We all deserve liberation so that we can make better decisions. Decisions that reflect justice, equality, and that put compassion at the heart of the agenda.

Audiences will walk away from the presentation with a step-by-step methodology empowering them to shift their perspective, by understanding how an imbalance in power influences everything from how we work, to how we play, and even how policy is created.

It is evident that we are living in a world where fear is at every door, but what we know is that decisions that come from fear are never the solution. We must be brave by design, and willing to stand up for the freedom that we deserve. If we do then anything is possible.

ABOUT

Emma Husar

Emma Husar is most famously known for her role as a former member of the Australian House of Representatives for the Division of Lindsay for the Australian Labor Party (ALP) which she represented from 2016-2019.

Emma never planned on entering the world of politics, yet fate would lead her there. From 1988 to 2002 she attended Western Sydney University and studied a Bachelor of Education, before becoming a mother to three children. In 2013, she joined the Labor Party and by 2015 had become President of the Penrith Branch. In 2016 she went on to win the seat of Lindsay with a swing of 4.1 per cent. At the time she was considered the rising star of the ALP.

The turning point came in 2018 when Emma faced unfounded allegations by former staff of sexual harassment and bullying. These untested allegations were leaked to the media forcing Emma to launch a high profile defamation case against BuzzFeed which was settled out of court in her favour. During this period she was unfairly forced by the ALP to resign.

In May 2021 Emma commenced legal action against the ALP for sexual harassment, as a result of her former staff for making misleading claims that jeopardised her reputation, and her career aspirations as a woman of political influence. This action represents Emma's desire to be a voice for all marginalised women in leadership roles.

Today Emma is completing a Masters of Business with the Australian Institute of Management. She is a recruit on season 2 of SAS Australia which will premiere on Channel 7, after the Olympics. Her story has also featured on ABC's Ms Represented documentary in July 2021.

As a speaker Emma fuses comedy with charisma, sharing a story of courage, resilience and a conviction to the path of justice.

Jo Abi
Journalist & Author

"Emma is a lesson in strength, vulnerability, growth, and working to make the world a better place. So excited she is sharing everything she has learned with the world."

Helen McCabe
CEO, Future Women

"Emma Husar has an incredibly important and powerful voice in the ongoing fight for greater equality. She was broken by her experience but she is back. Her mix of strength and vulnerability makes her a highly compelling speaker at this important moment in time."

Annabel Crabb
Political Commentator & TV Journalist

"In her prematurely-ended term in Parliament, Emma Husar delivered one of the most powerful speeches I've seen in that place. She is a fearless campaigner and memorable communicator."
